DAY 05

Hanoi - Hue

(B, L,D)

Traditional Vietnamese calligraphy is strongly affected by that of China for historical and geographic regions. In modern times, calligraphy has been done mainly in the Latin-based Quốc Ngữ script, as Chữ nôm and Chinese characters have largely fallen out of use. Quốc Ngữ calligraphy gained popularity during the New Poetry and Free Poetry Movements due to the increasing popularity of using the Vietnamese vernacular, as well as influence from French literature.

Even when education was restricted to scholars and elites in Vietnam many years ago, calligraphy played an important part in Vietnamese life. On special occasions such as the Lunar New Year, people would go to the village teacher or scholar to make them a calligraphy hanging (often poetry, folk sayings or even single words). People who could not read or write also often commissioned scholars to write prayers which they would burn at temple shrines
